Interrelate appoints new Chief Executive Officer to drive digital service delivery and client experience

The Board of Interrelate Limited is pleased to announce the appointment of Graeme O'Connor as its new Chief Executive Officer.

Graeme has been Acting CEO since March this year and has been part of Interrelate's executive management team since 2005, most recently as Head of Corporate Services. Over the last 16 years, Graeme has played a significant part in furthering Interrelate's purpose, values, culture and brand.

Graeme's vision for Interrelate is that we continue to lead the way in helping people to thrive in their relationships as we have done since 1926. "Central to this is the importance that digital service delivery will play in meeting the needs of our next generation of clients who have specific expectations around personalised service and technology preference, functionality and capability," said Graeme O'Connor, CEO Interrelate.

Graeme is passionate about leading sector change in how some of today's significant social problems such as family and domestic violence and loneliness are addressed.

Graeme shares the Board's view that Interrelate is an organisation that operates with cultural humility and that makes a sustained lasting impact on reconciliation.

"Interrelate is successful because of our passionate, caring, workforce who recognise emerging social problems, identify gaps in our service delivery, and who find ways to narrow them. I look forward to working with all staff as we each contribute our part in shaping the future and help people thrive in their relationships," said O'Connor.

The Board looks forward to working with Graeme and the Executive team as we embark on the next period of our evolution that focusses on growth, innovation, sustainability, employee development, and service for our clients.
